ONANCOCK -- The Rev. Dr. Kirk Mariner, an historian and author, and a retired United Methodist minister, has published his ninth book about the Eastern Shore of Virginia.

"Almost An Island, The History of Saxis, Virginia," is available at The Book Bin for $17.95 and has arrived in time for holiday gift-giving.

In his introduction, Brooks Miles Barnes, librarian at the Eastern Shore Public Library, calls the book "one of Kirk Mariner's finest achievements."

"For so small and remote a place, Saxis Island's history is surprisingly rich," states the book jacket. "Its main characters are a host of simple folk for whom the tradition of 'following the water' required hard work, resilience, and ingenuity -- oystermen and watermen, old salts and blockade runners saint and scalawags, even a family of muskrat farmers.

"Yet a number of notable figures from the outside world keep dropping in: Captain John Smith, a British sea captain, renowned aviators and generals and admirals -- plus an elephant that oldtimers are still talking about."

Mariner was assisted in the research and writing of the book by Barry W. Miles and Moody K. Miles III, Saxis natives who are among the Shore's foremost genealogists.
